Dear Alumnus,

I am honored to serve as the eighth president of Jamestown Community College. Since my arrival in August 2013, I have received a warm welcome from students, faculty, staff, alumni, friends of the college, and business and community leaders. Many have shared great stories about the profound relationship they have with JCC.

Our faculty and staff are engaged and inspired and take deep personal pride in their work. Our alumni consistently bring credit to the college through their personal accomplishments, professional achievements, and humanitarian service. Community and business leaders enjoy a solid relationship with this institution and see JCC not only as a partner but as an economic engine in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties.

In every conversation I’ve had, one thing is clear to me – there is great affection for and pride in this institution. Our challenge is to build on this solid foundation to further the impact and influence of this great college.

To continue our success, we are eager for you to remain committed to your alma mater. We invite you to join the JCC Alumni Association, find ways to volunteer your time in service to the college, or connect with us through online social spaces. We encourage your input as we find ways to engage current students and connect them with our alumni. Over time, your help in building valuable relationships and establishing internships and scholarships for our students would also be most appreciated. In all of these ways, you can leave an indelible mark upon this institution.

I hope to meet many of you at college events and, more importantly, I look forward to working together to advance the JCC cause.

Very truly yours,

Cory L. Duckworth, J.D.
President

“...there is great affection for and pride in this institution.”

~ Cory L. Duckworth, J.D.

Dear Alumnus,

It’s my pleasure to welcome you to the inaugural issue of green & gold, the newly redesigned magazine for Jamestown Community College alumni!

Not long ago, JCC revamped its brand image and embraced green and gold, the colors of the college’s heritage. Working with the college’s graphic designer, the Alumni Relations Office took the opportunity to redesign the alumni magazine and give it a fresh, new look that aligns it with the college’s brand.

green & gold will be published in print once per year. It is our hope that incoming students, who will soon be our newest alumni, will find inspiration in its pages as they begin their academic careers at JCC.

In addition to a redesigned print edition, green & gold will be published in a true digital format for the first time in the history of the JCC alumni magazine. You can sign up to receive a digital magazine via email once per year to coincide with the publication of the print edition. And once per quarter, we’ll send a short email to update you on the latest alumni news, alumni events, and campus happenings.

We’re working hard to keep you connected with your alma mater. Whether you enjoy the print or digital editions, green & gold will provide you with in-depth features on your fellow alumni and the success of your peers.

We’d love your feedback! Let us know what you think of green & gold and tell us whether you prefer the print or digital edition. You can even offer story ideas for future issues! Feel free to contact the Alumni Relations Office at any time via email at alumni@mail.sunyjcc.edu or via telephone at 716.338.1056.

Best,

Kristen A. Johnson
Director of Alumni Relations

JAMESTOWN COMMUNITY COLLEGE | ALUMNI MAGAZINE FALL 2014 | 03
Installed last fall as the eighth president of Jamestown Community College, Cory L. Duckworth, J.D. quickly made the transition from serving as Utah Valley University’s vice president of student affairs to leading Jamestown Community College toward new opportunities. Opportunities, of course, are often accompanied by challenges, which Dr. Duckworth identified during his inauguration ceremony in November 2013.

As he reflects on his inaugural year, Dr. Duckworth said it is important that JCC keep pace with technological innovations in educational delivery and helping communities in JCC’s service area achieve economic revitalization.

“We have been working hard in each of these critical areas and will continue to do so,” he said. “Such opportunities will require taking the long view and deploying consistent effort to realize significant gains. Over the last year, I have developed a profound sense of appreciation for the tremendous role that JCC plays in the lives of its constituents. People here speak of the college with great respect. They understand its critical mission as an agent of life transformation and frequently tout its success as a primary economic and cultural wellspring in the community.”

Dr. Duckworth’s presidency began shortly after New York Governor Andrew Cuomo and SUNY Chancellor Nancy Zimpher visited JCC’s Jamestown Campus in July 2013 to announce an aggressive effort to maximize SUNY institutions as economic drivers within the communities they serve. START UP New York, approved by state legislative leaders, established a significant role for institutions of higher education by linking new business development with SUNY’s mission to educate the state’s developing workforce. In essence, JCC will serve as a gatekeeper for those hoping to access anticipated tax reduction benefits provided by statute.

“This is a new role for JCC,” Dr. Duckworth says, “and we understand that our willingness to embrace it is an important key to the economic well-being of our service region. For this reason, we were one of the first community colleges to meet the guidelines as a qualified START UP New York processor.”

Admitting that it is premature to predict the ultimate impact of START UP New York on the region, Dr. Duckworth said JCC will benefit from its ability to facilitate the addition of new businesses which will create jobs for citizens, students, and alumni. Other benefits could include student internship opportunities and increased interaction between JCC faculty and local business leaders in an effort to keep the college’s curriculum highly relevant to existing job demands.

As he makes economic revitalization a focus of his presidency, Dr. Duckworth said he is carefully considering ways in which the college can support regional manufacturing, a primary economic sector in the Chautauqua and Cattaraugus region that depends upon well-trained employees. Locally-trained employees hired by local manufacturers are more likely to enjoy an extended tenure in their jobs, providing a solid foundation upon which area manufacturers can build and expand.

“I have met with dozens of CEOs and plant managers during the past year and these industry leaders beam with pride when they speak of their employees and the world class products they create,” he said. “Many operate in a globally competitive environment, shipping their products to significant clients across the globe. Their uniform request to me, as JCC’s president, is to prepare and help them secure well-trained employees who emanate from the local environment.”

Through customized training on industry specific equipment, JCC has been able to help meet the need for skilled manufacturing employees for several years through the Manufacturing Technology Institute on the Jamestown Campus. A similar facility on the Cattaraugus County Campus is now being developed to provide instruction in advanced tooling and machining, 3D printing, CAD/CAM, welding, and other manufacturing skills. Dr. Duckworth said the college is exploring so-called “maker spaces” – or manufacturing incubator spaces – that will facilitate relationships between JCC students and local entrepreneurs.

JCC’s reputation and its enduring legacy as an innovative institution are hallmarks that cannot be taken for granted, Dr. Duckworth said. “It is clear to me that high quality faculty and a strong curriculum are points of pride in each academic program,” he said. “As a community college, we need to further enhance our relationships and connection to the employers in our service region.

“Today’s students should have the opportunity to graduate with both a diploma and a resumé,” he said. “We need to empower our students through internships, leadership experiences, and service projects while they pursue their education. This will allow them to put theory into practice, develop a deeper understanding of the value associated with learning and its connection to work, and prepare students to embrace their careers and life opportunities with greater commitment and confidence.”
The Jamestown Community College Alumni Association honored four alumni as the 2014 recipients of the Distinguished Alumnus Award, which is the highest honor presented by the Jamestown Community College Alumni Association. The award, now in its 34th year, is given to those who have typified the JCC tradition of excellence and brought credit to the college through personal accomplishment, professional achievement, or humanitarian service.

Joshua T. Harris, J.D., ’98
Dr. Harris earned a degree in social sciences, with a concentration in political science, from JCC. As a student at JCC, Dr. Harris participated in the SUNY Model European Union and the International Negotiation Modules Project. That experience led him to a storied career in economic policy, during which he worked as an international trade specialist for the U.S. Department of Commerce in the International Trade Administration’s Office of Technology and Electronic Commerce. Dr. Harris is now the policy director for The Future of Privacy Forum, a Washington, D.C.-based think tank advancing responsible data use and consumer privacy.

Felix Muzza, ’72
Mr. Muzza earned an Associate of Arts degree in social sciences from JCC. He is currently the experiential learning coordinator for JCC, but is perhaps best known for his 36-year career with Jamestown Public Schools. Mr. Muzza began his career with the school system as a work-study coordinator at Jamestown High School before becoming the dean of students at Abraham Lincoln Elementary School and, later, its assistant principal. He was the principal at C.C. Ring Elementary School for 14 years before returning to Lincoln School as its principal for eight years.

Patricia M. Phillips, ’63
Mrs. Phillips worked for 25 years as the vice president of the family-owned ACME Appliance Store. But she is best known for her life’s work as a tireless community volunteer – work for which she was named Woman of the Year in 2001. Mrs. Phillips’ volunteer work has included the JCC Foundation board of directors; the JCC Alumni Association board of directors for the Jamestown Campus; the WCA Hospital Foundation board of directors; the WCA Hospital Auxiliary; the Jamestown Concert Association board of directors; the Arts Council of Chautauqua County; the Reg Lenna Civic Center; the Chautauqua Region Community Foundation; Crèche; and the George Bataitis Open Golf Tournament committee.

Brenda Freeman Sawyer, ’93
Mrs. Freeman Sawyer earned an Associate of Science degree in math and science from JCC and is now a physician assistant for the Olean Medical Group. There, she works in endocrinology to treat and diagnose a variety of conditions, including thyroid disorders, hypoglycemic disorders, and other disorders of the endocrine system. As a physician assistant, Mrs. Freeman Sawyer was instrumental in the opening of Olean General Hospital’s campus in Port Allegany.

“It is our pleasure and privilege to honor these alumni,” said Kristen A. Johnson, the college’s director of alumni relations. “Each began his academic career at Jamestown Community College and has gone on to achieve great things. Our Distinguished Alumnus Award recipients are wonderful role models for our students and are shining examples of the heights they can reach. Each year, the Distinguished Alumnus Award is presented at commencement exercises so that the newest members of the extensive JCC alumni network can be inspired by their accomplishments.”
When Ebrahim Randeree, M.B.A., Class of 1988, began his education at JCC in 1986, companies like Apple, Microsoft, and Dell were barely off the ground. Facebook, Twitter, and Google weren’t even a glimmer in anyone’s eye. Smartphones, tablet computers, and e-readers hadn’t been invented.

“The Internet was in its infancy,” Randeree said. “AOL was just coming online at the time and we were only just starting to send email to each other.”

In the nearly 30 years since then, entire sectors of public life and the global economy have experienced seismic shifts as technology becomes ever more entrenched in everyday life – and Randeree is at the forefront of it all.

He’s now the associate dean at Florida State University’s College of Communication & Information, where his research interests include social media and mobile technologies. He’s developed a relatively new focus on leadership and social media as they relate to the information technology field. And he’s presented at conferences across the country on topics that range from health information management to information services for libraries and partnering with employers to redesign information technology curricula.

Computer science and research wasn’t Randeree’s first choice when he launched his college career. He initially intended to be a physician – but life took an interesting turn.

“Funny story: I failed Dr. Taylor Pancoast’s organic chemistry class,” he said. “And that was it. I had all the math courses, but needed to find my niche since medicine was clearly not an option anymore. I had an interest in problem solving, logic, and designing things – even before computers showed up. Computer science was an extension on that interest, just with better hardware and software.”

Randeree said computer courses came easy to him because logic and design seemed intuitive. But even then, he was able to sense the inevitability of technology.

“It became apparent that technology was the future and no matter field or industry I got into, technology would play a significant role in it,” he said. “I realized that technology skills, communication skills, and project management skills transcended all disciplines. If I wanted to create a base for multiple future careers, I needed to focus on classes that gave me those foundations."

As a young man beginning his college education, Randeree had a strong sense of the landscape and knew computer science was for him.

“Every six months brought new technology, faster processors, and better solutions,” he said. “It was and still is an exciting field to work in. Tomorrow will be different. The technology we’ll have and jobs we’ll perform five years from now haven’t even been invented.”

The computer science department at JCC was the natural choice, Randeree said. He had already selected JCC over a four-year university because of its small class size, “better access to awesome faculty,” and the ability to live at home to save money. But most of all, he said, the fact that faculty and staff cared about each student on an individual level meant a lot.

“I was really drawn to the computer science department,” he said. “The faculty – all of whom are retired now – were excellent. All of my credits transferred to the Rochester Institute of Technology with ease. And the computer industry was just beginning to emerge, and I got to be right in the thick of it.”

Randeree remembered professors who had a profound impact upon him as a student, including Rick Rupprecht, who made him and his classmates take calculus exams at 7:30 a.m.; Dr. Taylor Pancoast, whose organic chemistry course he failed and who once beat him at table tennis so he’d attend class; Kaye Young and Nancy Callahan at the Main Street tutorial center, who guided him in his career search and found outlets for his free time; John Hearn, who he said “used sociology to teach the meaning of life;” Susan Sandmeyer, who “used great analogies to explain concepts;” and Karl Klee.

“Oh, the list goes on and on,” he said. “I remember Frank Petiprin, Dan Callahan, Martha Zenns, Andy Kibler … there are so many memories. Having access to these amazing people, being able to have a real conversation with them and learn the material – that was so valuable to me as a student. All these years later, I still recommend to students that they start at a two-year school and then move on. The foundation JCC gave me is very important. Large schools save money by having huge introductory classes, and you can get lost easily. I never felt lost at JCC.”

With your ongoing support, future generations of students will be able to achieve their life’s goals.

Together, JCC and the JCC Foundation face three compelling challenges: academic excellence, access to higher education, and capital resources. We work together and with the close support of our donors to meet this three-pronged challenge through The Annual Campaign for JCC.

Unrestricted Capital Resources
Over the years, capital resources for higher education have diminished. The JCC Foundation is committed to providing the capital resources that foster superior education and service to JCC students. The Foundation stands ready to collaborate with the college in meeting future challenges.

Academic Excellence
JCC is committed to recognizing and encouraging academic excellence and providing financial support to students with exceptional talent and leadership potential.
